Dyed cotton and linen pulp, sequined fabrics, velvet, lace, and discarded food packaging netting

Artists in Planting for Peace explore how we might hear and respond to our environment's call for care. We are invited to reflect on our experience of place, recognize the human labor in our food systems, and engage in more sustainable use of materials and resources. What does planting for peace look like as we seek to be good neighbors and work towards ecological justice for the flourishing of the city?

This exhibition is the first part of a yearlong community engagement effort using the arts to examine the intersections of ecojustice, faith, and community.

Featuring the work of Jon Bunge, Timotheus Davis, Alexis Duque, Cara Enteles, Alice Momm, Lina Puerta, Pedro Ramirez, and Rachael Wren.

Curated by Anthony Artis, Adrienne Croskey, Sarah Gerth van den Berg, Huibing He, Maria Liu Wong, and Jenny Tibbels.
